

Leveraging Referral, Partner, and Affiliate Programs to Expand Your Client Base

Acquiring new clients can be expensive and time-consuming, especially with traditional marketing approaches. Referral, affiliate and partner programs offer a smarter way forward. By tapping into networks of trusted advocates and professionals, these strategies help businesses connect with high-quality leads, reduce acquisition costs, and build long-term relationships.

In this document, we'll break down three common approaches to finding new clients through these channels, including how they work and tips for implementation.

Referral programs: harnessing your existing network

A referral program leverages your existing relationships by incentivizing individuals who already know your business, like clients, employees, and professional connections, to recommend your services to others. These referrals often come with built-in trust, making them highly effective at generating high-quality leads. Once the referral is made, it's up to you to nurture the lead, close the sale, and reward the referrer.

A referrer will typically introduce you to a lead or suggest your services directly to someone they know. Their role usually ends after the introduction, leaving the sales process to you. In return for the introduction, the referrer might be rewarded with a gift card, cash, or something else of value, depending on your business model and the value of the referral.

To get the most out of a referral program, keep the process simple and transparent. Clearly define what counts as a successful referral - whether it's an initial consultation, a closed sale, or something in between. Then, match the reward to the effort required.

Be sure to communicate and promote the referral program to your network. Incorporate reminders into newsletters, social media, your email signature block, and personal interactions. If you have a business that primarily operates online, use tools like referral codes and shareable links to make it effortless to recommend your business to others.

If appropriate for your business model, consider providing a benefit to the referred prospect in addition to the referral partner. For example, referred prospects will receive a 20% discount on their first order. The discount provides further incentive for the referral partner.

Finally, ensure you promptly reward your referrers to reinforce goodwill and encourage additional referrals. When possible, automate reward distribution to streamline the process and reduce the administrative burden.

Affiliate programs: expanding through professional promoters

Affiliate programs leverage professionals, influencers, or organizations to promote your business to a broader audience, typically through online channels. Affiliates drive traffic to your website, landing pages, or sales portals, where leads can make purchases or schedule a meeting. Affiliates rarely engage in direct, one-on-one sales; instead, they focus on generating visibility and leads for your company. While a referral partner is a more casual relationship, an affiliate partner is focused on earning an income through affiliate commissions.

This model is highly scalable and particularly effective for online businesses. Affiliates use their platforms, like blogs, social media, or websites, to promote your product or service. Generally, they earn a commission for every successful lead or sale generated through their efforts, tracked via unique links or codes. For example, an online retailer might collaborate with a fashion influencer who earns a percentage of sales made through a custom link shared on their blog or social media posts. This setup benefits both parties - the affiliate monetizes their audience, and the business gains access to a broader customer base.

Select and vet affiliates carefully

When implementing an affiliate program, select and vet your affiliates carefully. Choose affiliates whose audiences align with your target demographic and whose promotional methods align with your brand values.

Provide marketing support

Be sure to provide affiliates with professional marketing materials, such as banners, graphics, and pre-written sales copy. Offer clear guidelines for messaging and branding to maintain consistency and prevent misrepresentation.

Establish clear tracking and reporting mechanisms

Use affiliate software to manage affiliates, sales, and commissions. Affiliate software is typically integrated with your sales process for automated tracking and payouts. Affiliates can log in to the affiliate portal to view their referrals, sales, and commissions. This type of software is great for reporting, reducing the administrative burden of running the program and ensuring affiliates are promptly rewarded for their efforts.

Offer competitive commissions

Ensure your commission rates are competitive for your industry. Research what similar businesses offer, and consider bonuses for top-performing affiliates to encourage continued effort. Treat your affiliates as valued partners rather than transactional contributors. Offer recognition for high performers and communicate regularly about new opportunities or promotions.

Ensure compliance and transparency

Establish clear terms and conditions that outline the rules of the program, including prohibited practices such as spam or misleading promotions. Transparency in commission structures, payment timelines, and expectations builds trust with affiliates and ensures compliance with advertising regulations.

Partner programs: building collaborative relationships

Partner programs involve a deeper level of collaboration, often with partners taking an active role in the sales process and client relationship. Partners may sell your product as part of a broader package or even act as resellers. Unlike referrers or affiliates, partners often provide ongoing value, such as maintaining the client relationship or supporting your product after the sale.

A partner may integrate your product or service into their own offering and or assist in the implementation and ongoing support for the customer. For example, a Voice over IP telephone company might work with IT consulting firms to resell their phone systems and provide support to clients. In return, partners typically receive ongoing compensation based on a revenue share or wholesale pricing.

Partner programs tend to work well for businesses looking to expand into new markets or industries through established networks. They're also well-suited for companies with complex offerings that require customization, integration, or post-sale support.

Define roles and responsibilities

Partner programs require a significant amount of coordination. You need to clearly outline what is expected in a written agreement, including compensation terms, exclusivity clauses, and performance expectations.

You also need to ensure your partners are well-trained in your offerings so they effectively represent your brand and are able to fully support the product or service.

Foster collaboration

Regular touchpoints, whether through quarterly meetings or joint marketing initiatives, help ensure alignment with mutual goals. Treat partners as extensions of your team, not just external contributors. Acknowledge their successes, offer incentives for continued engagement, and demonstrate how the partnership benefits them in the long run.

About Larson Gross

Ted Larson and Dennis Gross founded our firm in 1949. They built the business based on excellence, passion, integrity, trust and pro-action — values still important to us more than seven decades later.

Even well into their retirement years, Ted Larson and Dennis Gross continued to have the best interest of the firm at heart. Mr. Larson would come into the office on a regular basis to meet every new face and make a personal connection with each of our team members. He remembered the name of every employee, as well as the names of their spouses and children, and would greet clients by name as he passed by the reception desk. Sometimes, you'd even find a newspaper clipping on your desk that Mr. Larson dropped off, highlighting that your son made the honor roll. This is the example of a genuine relationship we strive to embody with our people and clients.

Today, we're led by ten partners who are growing our firm with respect for where we've come from and a new vision for future success. Our 120-plus team members and three offices located in Bellingham, Lynden and Burlington make us the 10th largest public accounting firm in the Puget Sound region. While we're determined to expand our impact and help strengthen as many businesses and individuals as we can, we're also committed to remaining a locally-owned organization. We're incredibly proud of where we've come from and look forward to a future of possibility
